The following was written by a secretary in the Taylor Schools.....

On Thursday I was working at the P.R.C. and one of our Special Needs Drivers stopped by to pick up some maps to take to Transportation. We started to talk and I asked him why in the world he didn't retire in June, with the additional multiplier that the state offered he would receive extra money every month for life. Now I have known this driver for years and he has never struck me as an emotional person, but I watched as his eyes welled up with tears and he responded with "because I made a promise." Taken aback by the sudden display of emotion, I asked him what promise that could be. He then said "I have driven special needs children for years and you love them all, but you know how you will meet a couple that tug at your heart strings? Well I promised two of them that I have transported since they were three years old that I would be their bus driver until they graduate from high school. One of them will graduate this year and the other one will graduate next year, and then I will retire."

We provide services to life's most valuable treasures, our children. Yes it is a job; it provides our own families with the necessities of life, but in the process we are leaving imprints in our future citizens. I'll bet that the two young people that our driver was referring to will remember his kindness and the fulfillment of his promise for the rest of their lives. I know that the students that have little at home will remember the cook that gave them a little extra, the maintenance person that helped them with their locker for the tenth time, or cleaned up after them when they had the flu and just couldn't quite make it. What about the secretary that dries tears and holds them in her arms for a hug. The one who makes sure you have lunch money, supplies for your class and in many cases, clothes.

Our Library Media Aides, who take the extra time helping to find a book or read a story when they are busy doing something else. Oh and the crossing guards that make sure that our students that have to walk to school, walk into a busy street first to make sure traffic stops so the children can safely cross. The bus monitors on our special need buses that calm some and care for all our special needs students to ensure they safely arrive at school. The special education aids that help our challenged children with everything from working on projects, eating lunch, and taking them to the bathroom. Let's not forget the ladies who walk the little ones to lunch, help them with their needs, and then help clean the cafeteria when lunch is over. And even the one gentleman that works in the print department who makes sure all the teacher requests get printed for our children to use in their classes.

I just wanted to say thank you to that driver. I'm sure you can remember someone who made an impression on you while you attended school. Whether it was elementary, junior high, or high school. What about the counselor who helped you change your classes or guided you through your choices for scholarships or college applications. I know I can name a few who I remember to be an influence in my life. Mr. Rima, Mr. Buck, and Ms. Coleman to name a few. Whether you are in the educational field or not, you can make a difference in someone's life.

Do You Remember?

Truman counselor, Leo Diroff, is somewhat of an icon in Taylor. This year marks two milestones in his life: his fiftieth year as a Taylor educator and his eightieth birthday. During his Taylor tenure, Leo has crossed many paths and touched many lives.

Leo Diroff didn't begin his career path with education in mind. He attended seminary for seven years with the intention of becoming a missionary. When health issues arose, he had to leave and his path changed. Leo began his new career when the principal of St Alfred's in Taylor called him and offered a teaching position, even though Leo only had 77 credit hours. If Leo promised to finish his degree, St. Alfred's would hire him to teach grade 5 to 8, all subjects.

Leo accepted the offer, and after one year, his brother Larry was also hired as a teacher. Larry taught all the math classes, Leo taught all the English classes, and the nuns handled the rest.

In 1961, Leo applied to Taylor Center High School where he taught English until Kennedy opened. On February 8, 1965, Kennedy opened its doors to students and teachers, even though it was still under construction. Leo began teaching 3 Latin classes in room 217.

Since Leo didn't start his first class until 10AM, he got a part time job driving a school bus for parochial schools. Leo continued to teach Latin and the number of Latin classes continued to increase.

In 1973, his career path took another turn when he became a counselor at Kennedy. During the great layoff of 1980, Kennedy was forced to reduce the number of counselors, and Leo's low seniority sent him packing back to Taylor Center. When Taylor Center closed, Leo moved to Truman, still as a counselor. Leo remains in that position at Truman today.

Even though his teaching schedule became full time in 1966, Leo continued his "other" career as a bus driver. From 1966 to 1990, he drove for Greyhound. After that, he continued to drive a charter bus for Corporate Travel.

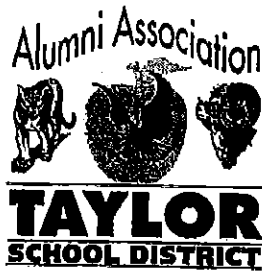

As one can imagine, after fifty years as an educator, Leo acquired many memories. One of Leo's favorite memories was the senior honor convocation dinners held at Roma Hall in Livonia or the Roostertail in Detroit.

Another favorite memory was the boat rides on the Detroit River that were arranged by John Pantalone. A dinner at Sinbads and many laughs always followed.

If you are one of the privileged alumni to have had Leo as a teacher or counselor, you know how fortunate you were. Leo is rare gem among educators, and after fifty years, he is still going strong.

Thank you to Marsha Fortune (Bunch)...for this article

We know there are many more graduates or faculty and staff who have outstanding careers and lives. Please send in information on someone you would like recognized to: John Pantalone at: johnpantalone@sbcglobal.net or send it to the Alumni email at: tayloralumniassociation@yahoo.com
